It's a wonderful place to get out your feelings and because of it's relation with the well written series it makes you feel like an important part of history.

I think this diary is a wonderful idea. Someday, your great grandchildren might want to know a little about what their great grandmother was like, and what is a better way then to let them look at a diary that you wrote? All girls, and even boys, should have diaries.

If you've read Dear America, want to follow the tradition of girls writing their thoughts, hopes, feelings, and fondest dreams in a diary, and are an avid enough fan of the series to want "My Dear America Diary" stamped on the cover of your diary, get this. However, in my opinion, it's the inside of a diary, what you write in it, that counts, not the exterior decoration. None of the "Dear America" girls had "My Dear America Diary" on the cover of their diaries; save yourself money and just use a notebook or a cheaper blank book if you don't care what the cover says. However, I myself am such an avid fan I wanted this, but I can't see most people finding the cover making much of a difference. That's only my opinion. But Scholastic did do a good job of putting this diary together and selecting cover art and format.
